The firm of Brown & Perkins of Norwich appear for the plaintiff and Attorney George W. Melony of this city for the defendants.

The complaint alleges that Noe Caron was injured because of the negligence of the defendants, who had the contract for overhauling a building for Raymond Jodoin in Norwich, Caron, it is alleged, was a painter, and while not employed by Latham & Crane he was allowed by them to use a board not employed by Latham & Crane he was allowed by them to use a board staging erected by them and they did not warn him that they were soing to take the staging down. Caron, it is further alleged, was hadly hurt, having on ankle sprained and so injured that he could not work and was thus put to much expense.

Practically all of the counts alleged in the complaint were denied by the defendants, except that Latham & Crane did build the staging for their own use, but did not give Caron permission to use same for painting.

J. I. BEACH

The members of McGregor post, G. A. R., who heard J. L. Reach, a veteran of the Confederate army, at the meeting of the post on Tuesday evening were highly pleased with what they consider one of the most interesting meetings that they have held in a long time.

In his introductory Mr. Beach said:
"What I may say this evening being from a Confederate standpoint may not be altogether agreeable, but I shall endeavor to state facts only and I hope that no offense will be taken, but will bear in mind that whereas once we were divided and enemies, tonight we are united and are friends; that we vie with each other in our allegiance to a reunited country, and that we are and defense and upholding of our glorious flag, the Stars and Stripes.

"I have one little grievance that I would like to adjust, if possible. The highest rank that I attained in the Confederate army was that of first lieutenant and adjutant of my regiment, but since I came to Danielson I have been promoted to coloned. This promotion is very flattering, but I fear that it is hardly merited. However, I do not feel that is sufficiently important to cause any hard feeling."

Mr. Beach's talk was a review of the mobilization of the Confederate troops at the outbreak of the war and of the movements of the Confederate armies under Generals Van Dorn, Elwell, Rhodes, Beauregard, Joe Johnson and Stonewall Jackson, under all of whom he served.

Stonewall Jackson, under ail of whom he served.

He told of the fire of enthusiasm that swept the south after the capture of Fort Sumpter and of his enlistment in the army of the gray.

First his regiment went to Pensacola, Fla. to aid in the intended capture of Fort Pickens, but soon afterwards the regiment was ordered to Richmond. The greater part of the trip was made in box cars, as the railmost entered to a server of the first particles. The was made in hox cars, as the railmost entered to the command of General Van Dorn.

The most effective and harmless world, which will effect so thorough and prompt a cure as a fifty-cent trouble, is to take several doses of Pape's Diuretic. After the arrival of his regiment at the Virginia capital the command of General Van Dorn. They participated in the buttles that made up the Virginia campaign following the outbreak of the war. General Beach's narrative of the defense of Richmond in the spring of 1862 and the subsequent advance on Washington held the veterans that listened to him in rapt attention. The speaker's story led up to the battle of Antietam, one of the most bloody ever fought, where 16,000 Confederate soldiers were taken prisoners, one of whom was Mr. Beach. All of the story of the doings of the army that had opposed them during this campaign was mighty interesting to the Union men that had heard the whisele of shells on the battlefields of which Mr. Beach talked.

In closing, Mr. Beach said: "I yield today to no man in my devotion to and love for this, our glorious country, as is evidenced by giving my son, who is very dear to me, to fight for and detend the Stars and Stripes, as he has already done in the Spanish-American war, he having had the honor of being with Admiral Dewey at Manila, and continues in the navy, ready to again render the best service in his power."
